The Ban-the-Bombers are still marching almost pathetically around Grosvenor Square. Apparently a new campaign against the US has been launched. It concerns illegitimate children in England, with American fathers. The posters are as follows:

> "J U S T I C E - There are over 70,000 babies in England with American Servicemen Fathers -- the USA do not and will not pay maintenance. Think of our young girls ruined, over 100,000 homes made unhappy, think of these girls' mothers in distress.
> Will you please help by calling for justice -- write to your MP -- get your friends to help."

> "SEND THE YANKS HOME and save the souls of our young girls. Over 70,000 of our young girls have bben ruined by the Yanks. Boxing, these hypocrites put the Niggers in the ring against our Boys -- they are on the prowl -- no boxing for them. Save the souls of our young girls, the playground for the Yanks. Parliament should check the Yanks, not Tanks."

E and I went by train to Oxford this morning, with Dorothy and De Myers. Arthur Goodhart met us at the station and took us to his house. We went to a large sherry party at University College, before attending an equally large lunch in the dining hall. There was a galaxy of celebrities for both occasions, including famous dons, masters, and wardens of different colleges, visitors such as Lord and Lady Kilmuir, other eminent lawyers, judges, and scholars from London and various universities.

I opened the Quadrangle with this speech:

Afterwards, we had a delightful garden party, which lasted for two or three hours. At 6:45, Dr. William Costin, President of St. John's College, gave a small dinner for E and myself. The other guests were Daniel Minchew, President of the Oxford University American Association, and some of his fellow American students.
